(Continued.) She faced Robin coolly. "It will be cessary to abandon our little lunchon for tomorrow. I am sorry. Still ar. Totten informs me that he will be in Vienna shortly. The pleasure is merely postponed.

"Are you in earnest about this trip by motor tomorrow morning?" demanded Robin darkly. "You surely cannot be"-

"I am very much in earnest," she said decisively. "Goodness, I know I shall not sleep a wink tonight."

"Nor I," said Robin gloomily. Suddenly his face lightened. A wild, reckess gream shot into his eyes, and, to their amazement, he banged the table with his fist. "By Jove, I know what I shall do. I'll go with you!" "No!" cried Bedelia, aghast. "I-I cannot permit it, Mr. Schmidt. Can't you understand? You-you are the man with whom I am supposed to be carrying on atrociously." "Well, I can tell you flatly just what I intend to do," said he, setting his jaws. "I shall hire another car and keep you in sight every foot of the ay. Where you go, I go."

"Do you mean it?" she cried, a new thrill in her voice. "I intend to see you every day," he declared, "from now till the end of "Really, Mr. Schmidt, you"-"If there is one thing I despise be yond all reason, Bedelia, it is the name of 'Schmidt!' I wish you wouldn't call me by that name."

"I can't just call you 'mister," she "Call me Rex for the present," said "I will supply you with a better "May I call him Rex?" she inquired

"In moderation," said Mrs. Gaston.
"Very well, then Rex, I have changed my mind. I shall not motor since you insist upon risking your neck in pursuit of me. I shall go by train in the morning. We will be in Vienna in two days. There I shall say goodby to you, for I am going to Graustark, the new Blithers estate. Surely you will not follow me there."

"You are very much mistaken. shall be there as soon as you and I shall stay just as long, provided Mr. Blithers has no objections," said Robin, with more calmness than he had hoped to display in the face of her

Mr. William W. Blithers arrived in Edelweiss, the capital of Graustark, on the same day that the prince returned from his tour of the world. As a matter of fact, he traveled by special train

He had lost no time in his across the continent. In the first dow. "How can we be sure that they place, his agents in Paris made it quite clear to him that there was likely to be "ructions" in Graustark over the loan and the prospect of a plebeian princess being seated on the the throne whether the people liked it or not, and in the second place Mand Applegate had left a note on his desk in the Paris offices, coolly informing him that she was likely to turn up in Edelweiss almost as soon as he. She added an annoying postscript. She said she was curious to see what sort of a place it was that he had been wasting his money on. To say that he was put out by lady's maid, a valet, a private secre-Maud's aggravating behavior would be stating the case with excessive gentleness. He was furious. He sent for the head of the detective agency and gave him a blowing up that he was never to forget. It appears that the detectives had followed a false lead and had been fooled by the wary Maud in a most humiliating manner. They hadn't the remotest notion where she was and evinced great surprise when informed in a voice loud enough to be heard a half block away that she was on her way to Graustark. Then he dragged Mrs. Blithers off to the Gare de l'Este and took the express to Vienna. He would see to the loan first and to Maud afterward. Going back a day or two, it becomes necessary to report that while in Vi-enna the perverse Bedelia played a shabby trick on the infatuated Robin. She stole away from the Bristol in the middle of the night and was halfway to the Graustark frontier before he note for him in which she said: Forgive me for running away like this. It is for the best. I must have a few days o myself, dear friend—days for sober resection uninfluenced by the presence of a stural enemy to composure. And so I am saving you in this cowardly, graceless ashion. Do not think ill of me. I give fashion. Do not think ill of me. I give you my solemn promise that in a few days he shall let you know where I may be found if you choose to come to me. Even then I may not be fully convinced in my own mind that our adventure has reached fits climax. You have said that you would accompany me to Graustark. I am leaving tonight for that country, where I shall remain in seclusion for a few days before acquainting you with my future plans. It is not my intention to stop in Edelweiss at present. The newspapers proclaim a state of unrest there over the coming visit of Mr. Blithers and the return of the prince, both of whom are very much in the public sye just now. I prefer the quiet of the country to the excitament of the city, so I shall seek some remote village and give myself up to—shall I say prayerful meditation? Belleve me, dear Rex, to be your most devoted though whimsical

His alert eyes were searching the growd along the street, in the balconies and windows with an eager intensity. He was looking for the sweet familiar face of the loveliest girl on earth. If she were there he wondered what her thoughts might be on beholding the humble R. Schmidt in the role of a royal prince receiving the laudations of the loving multitude!

Mr. Blithers indeed experienced plain sailing for the ensuing twenty hours. It was not until just before he disease. Having strong birds, set forth at 2 the next afternoon to attend by special appointment a meeting of the cabinet in the council with good judgment on the part of chamber at the castle that he encountered the first symptom of an early conference. It naturally would be of an informal character, as there was no present business before don, clerks and stenographers from them. The contracts had already the Paris office, to say nothing of a been signed by the government and much easier to raise the selling value by his authorized agents. So far as of the product by improving the nothing more to be said.

There was a distinct cloud on the financial horizon, however, a vague shadow at present, but prophetic of storm. It was perfectly clear to the nobles that when these bonds matured Mr. Blithers would be in a position to exact payment, and as they matured in twelve years from date he was likely to be pretty much alive and kicking when the hour of reckoning arrived.

Mr. Blithers was in the mood to be amiable. He anticipated considerable pleasure in visiting the ancient halls of his prospective grandchildren.

Mr. Blithers came with the brief note in reply to his request for an informal conference. The lord chamberlain curtly informed him that the desiring to speak to me will have to cabinet would be in session at 2 and would be pleased to grant him an audience of half an hour, depending on He was in some doubt at first, but his promptness in appearing. Mr. Blithers was not used to being granted audiences. He consoled himself, however, with the thought that matters would not always be as they were at present. There would be a decided change of tune later on.

It would be folly to undertake the depiction of Mr. Blithers' first impressions of the castle and its glories. To begin with, he lost no small amount of his assurance when he discovered that the great gates in the wall surrounding the park were guarded by resplendent drageons who demanded his "pass." After the efficer in charge had inspected the lord chamberlain's card as if he had never seen one before, he ceremoniously indicated to a warden that the gates were to be opened. There was a great clanking of chains, the drawing of iron bolts, the whirl of a windlass, and the penderous gates swung slow
